at Washington National Cathedral, Washington DC

2008-2011

CIFA's mission was to increase the collective impact of the faith community on global poverty. CIFA builds capacity of leaders of faith-based institutions and governments in the developing world, and advocates on behalf of the faith sector to governments and international policy and funding bodies. Program activities included: an International Consultation on Mapping Religious Health Assets with WHO; new business model for faith and public sector collaboration; in-country multi-faith collaborations including Nigerian Interfaith Action Association, a World Bank-funded Nigerian NGO through which Muslim and Christian faith leaders collaborate with the government in the nationwide campaign to end malaria deaths; international faith sector advocacy body, the "Global Initiative on Faith Health and Development"; 3 country study of African faith leader impact on the wellbeing of girls.

The CGJR mission is to increase impact of faith community on global poverty, focusing on malaria and gender. Activities included: development of the Cathedral's global poverty program and advocacy priorities for increased impact of faith sector on malaria and on gender and deployment of international convening power of Washington National Cathedral. 2005 Consultation among International Religious leaders on Global Poverty, and delivery of their consensus statement to the UN. Created and secured US Government funding for the first national multi-faith collaboration against malaria among Muslim, Christian, Hindu and Bahai'a faiths in Mozambique. Co-convened the Women Faith and Development Alliance and managed its launch at the Breakthrough Summit at the Cathedral, at which $1.4 billion in new commitments for women and girls was announced.
